President Warner at the Fall 2023
RIC Open House

FROM THE PRESIDENT OF RHODE ISLAND COLLEGE

On June 1 of last year, RIC students, faculty, staff and supporters gathered in the State House Rotunda for the annual "RIC Day," a celebration of all that our college is and all it does for the state. As he stepped to the podium to address the crowd, Gov. Daniel McKee said something that stuck with me. "We're all in on RIC," he declared on behalf of the state.

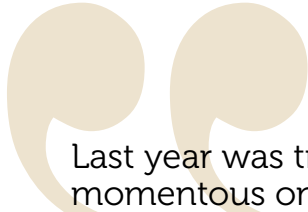

It was a perfect articulation of something I've been feeling since I joined the college as president in May of 2022. I didn't know what to expect when I arrived, but the inspiration I've found among this campus community has made this one of the most rewarding and exciting experiences of my career. I, too, am all in on RIC.

If you are receiving this report, then you have been a part of that. Rhode Island College is able to grow, thrive and make high quality higher education accessible to more Rhode Islanders than ever before because of the support of alumni and donors who are "all in" on that mission. Thank you for standing and being counted among them.

Time and again I have seen how committed you are to supporting RIC students in achieving their educational goals. Just this past November, for example, I issued a challenge to our college community, pledging to donate $1,000 to the Learning 4 Life food pantry, which nourishes students struggling with food insecurity, on Giving Tuesday. The response from 78 individual donors raised more than $10,000 to stock the pantry's shelves, which fed nearly 250 students in 2023.

Last year was truly a momentous one for Rhode Island College. In the fall, we launched the Hope Scholarship, a transformative opportunity for Rhode Island students to earn a four-year degree with the last two years tuition-free, along with the new Institute for Cybersecurity and Emerging Technologies, led by our former congressman and esteemed alumnus, James Langevin '90. We also introduced three new majors that will provide our students with more pathways to career success: cybersecurity, sports management, and biotechnology. Proving his word, McKee and the legislature supported the Hope Scholarship, the cybersecurity institute with a $2 million investment and the biotech program with a $700,000 investment from the state. The Champlin Foundation added another $400,000 for biotech.

Those are just a few examples of the incredible momentum that's building here on campus, and it's the tireless generosity of supporters like you that keeps us moving forward. On behalf of our entire campus community, I want to express my profound gratitude. Your contributions help us remove barriers for students and keep them on track to graduate. With approximately 70 percent of our alumni continuing to live and/or work in state after graduation, your support is more than just an investment in our students, it's an investment in Rhode Island. Thank you!

Sincerely,

Dr. Jack R. Warner

MESSAGE FROM THE FOUNDATION

On behalf of the board of directors and staff of the Rhode Island College Foundation, we would like to thank you for your continued generous support of Rhode Island College. Your contributions truly help to transform the lives of our students.

The board and staff of the Foundation had an exciting year, as we were able to move past the worst impacts of the COVID epidemic and shift our fundraising into high gear. Our individual giving increased 41 percent from fiscal year 2021-2022 and organizational giving increased 34 percent. We had the best RIC Giving Day ever, raising $150,000. Through your support we awarded $789,000 in scholarships to over 500 RIC students! Our endowment was $38,294,261 at the end of the fiscal year.

We hope to build on this momentum, and the future does look bright. Last year, we hosted six separate stewardship events, engaging over 200 donors, and we look forward to hosting more get-togethers for our supporters in the coming year. We are also bringing back the gala next fall; please be on the lookout for more details.

At the college, the recent Open House for high school seniors was the largest in memory, as students and their families are showing strong interest in Rhode Island College. RIC now boasts one of the most affordable bachelor's degrees in the nation by being able to offer the Hope Scholarship — free tuition to students in their junior and senior years if they are on track to graduate in four years. Our new academic programs at RIC include biotech, cybersecurity and sports management. Combining academic excellence and affordability, no college offers greater value than Rhode Island College.

Since 1965, the Foundation has helped to assure that thousands of students from across this state have the opportunity to transform their lives on this campus. We are humbled by your continued generosity and honored to continue this tradition for today's students.

Thank you.

NOURISHING THE MINDS OF RIC STUDENTS

An on-campus food pantry is thriving thanks to donor support. Rhode Island College's Learning 4 Life Center, often referred to as or "L4L," strives to connect students with resources to empower them and help them overcome obstacles on their educational journeys. One of L4L's offerings to students is a food pantry which is designed to provide snacks and meals that help them stay nourished while in school.

Until recently, this pantry was relatively small – the space was approximately 100 square feet within the existing L4L office space. However, a recent campaign raised more than $10,000 from more than 75 donors to expand the pantry and move it into a bigger space. During the Spring Semester, the pantry was relocated to the lower level of Building 3, which more than tripled the space to 366 square feet. The added space allowed L4L to utilize additional shelves and bring in ingredients for meals, rather than only supplying grab-and-go options. An additional donation allowed them to purchase a refrigerator for chilled drinks and snacks. These additional funds also allowed L4L to expand outside of strictly supplying food, as the pantry now has toiletries and feminine products as well.

Another benefit of this new space is the creation of a lounge area where students can eat and study in privacy. This more secluded and private location has helped students feel more comfortable while utilizing the pantry. "I had so many more conversations with students about their situations and struggles, and I was able to talk with them about L4L and other resources more often," said one staff member. The addition of more student workers to staff the pantry has also allowed it to remain open into the evening, providing additional support to graduate students and others taking night classes.

In the 2022-23 academic year, L4L distributed more than 1,800 pounds of food to almost 250 students. L4L plans to distribute a lot more in the upcoming academic year with more marketing of the pantry to boost awareness across the campus. A new system has been implemented to more accurately collect data and metrics for the pantry, which will lead to enhanced and more accurate findings to guide future growth. ■

The 'Food 4 Thought Pantry' was created in 2016 by L4L to help the college combat food insecurity among students.

LIFELONG EDUCATOR BELIEVES IN PHILANTHROPY

John J. Smith Jr. '63, M.A. '67 has dedicated his life to helping others and his alma mater. His unblemished track record of philanthropy has been on full display in his work on the board of the RIC Foundation, which he's served in several capacities from secretary to trustee to member of the board. He's currently in his second term as a board member.

Smith says he was encouraged to assist others from the example provided by his mother Anna Veronica (Keefe) Smith '33, '67 M.A.T. He learned a saying from her that abides with him today: "There are no pockets in the shroud." It's a mid-19th century expression that acknowledges that worldly wealth can't be held onto after death.

And that's why John, a retired educator from Cumberland, seeks out ways to give back. Recently he established the John J. Smith Jr. '63 and Anna Veronica (Keefe) Smith '33 Endowed Scholarship through the RIC Foundation.

The scholarship is awarded to students who have attended Cumberland schools. They must display an interest in teaching, have earned a grade point average of B or higher in high school and be accepted into Rhode Island College's Feinstein School of Education and Human Development's elementary education or secondary education program, with a concentration in mathematics. While at RIC, John majored in elementary education while his mother majored in mathematics. Their scholarship is given to one student per year and is designed to exist in perpetuity.

"With this scholarship, I hope to help future teachers in some way," he says, noting that his mother, who passed away in 2007 at age 95, would be thrilled by the scholarship.

"Rhode Island College has been like a second home for my mother and me," he says. "Before I became a student, my mom always spoke so highly of this institution and the opportunity I had to learn to be a teacher, which is all I've ever wanted to do. Once I enrolled, I got the feeling that people cared for you. I think that practice of helping people persists today at the college."

My mom always spoke so highly of this institution and the opportunity I had to learn to be a teacher, which is all I've ever wanted to do. Once I enrolled, I got the feeling that people cared for you. I think that practice of helping people persists today at the college.

—John J. Smith Jr. '63, M.A. '67

After graduating from RIC in 1933, Anna went on to teach algebra and business math at Cumberland High School for more than two decades. In 1974 she was named one of five outstanding secondary education teachers in America. Upon her retirement in 1976, after 28 years of teaching, the Cumberland School Committee created a resolution proclaiming her a “master teacher” who has left “an indelible mark on the educational history of the town of Cumberland.” At RIC, The Keefe Transportation Center – the site of the campus bus shelter – is named in her honor.

John followed in his mother's footsteps. He says he knew teaching was his calling because it was “one of the best ways to help young people become role models in the future.”

Both he and his mother also earned their graduate degrees in the same year.

“It was a wonderful experience to matriculate and then graduate together in 1967,” he says.

At age 28, John was appointed principal of Cumberland Hill Elementary School.

“I felt prepared to lead,” he says. “I had insight into learning styles and personalities, and I knew the children by name. I'm talking about over 600 students. I cared for, interacted with and knew them all. When you're an educator, the key is to engage everyone.”

He remained in administrative roles in Cumberland and Central Falls schools during a career that spanned 35 years. He says he hopes his legacy will be that he helped students jump-start their professional careers.

“If no one is there to give you a start or an opportunity to pursue your interests, what happens?” he asks. “Likely nothing will come to fruition. With this scholarship, I'm happy that I'll get to see the good that comes from helping students in need get started.” ■

WITH 38 YEARS of teaching experience between them are Mrs. Anna V. Smith and son John J. Mrs. Smith teaches at Cumberland Transitional School, and John is principal of B. F. Norton School.

ENGAGED LEARNING AT RIC HAPPENS IN THE CLASSROOM AND THE COMMUNITY

BY PROFESSOR MARY BAKER

Botanists are scientists who study plants. Ethnobotanists study plants of a specific region, focusing on the cultural meanings and traditional uses of plants.

For a semester, my ethnobotany students delved deep into ethnobotany, taking field trips and engaging in hands-on learning thanks to funding provided by the RIC Foundation, facilitated by RIC Interim Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs Carolynn Masters and Assistant to the Provost of Academic Affairs Alexis Rogel.

My students toured the Roger Williams Botanical Center with Director Lee Ann Freitas, where they learned how to identify plants indigenous to Rhode Island and from around the world. After identifying key characteristics of the plants they were studying, they researched the plants' ethnobotanic uses in food, medicine, material, culture, etc.

Led by Chris Dodge of Save the Bay, they learned about the physical and biological aspects of a salt marsh at Colt State Park.

Students inventory plants and animals in the salt marsh.

After gathering materials at a salt marsh in Colt State Park, students learn about the plants' ethnobotanic uses in food, medicine, material culture, etc.

After the field trip, they organized the information they gained during the field trip and fleshed out the ethnobotanical significance of the salt marsh plants, creating a guide to the marsh. This guide will be shared with Save the Bay for use in future programs.

My students also traveled to my dye studio, where they learned multiple ways to extract and use plant dyes. First, they learned about anthotyping. Paper was pre-treated with paprika or turmeric, objects were laid on top of the paper and then set in the sun. In about an hour, the sun destroyed the pigment, creating a photographic image.

My students learned how to make botanical prints and how to transfer images of plants directly onto fabric. They learned about mordants (chemicals that help dyes affix to fabric or paper) and tried a variety of plants and methods to see what kinds of images they could make. They learned how to extract dyes for use in painting and for other uses and how to change the Ph of dyes or introduce iron and tannin to alter color.

Perhaps their most significant experience involved developing an inventory of over 300 plants housed in the RIC Leslie Cameron Greenhouse and writing plant fact sheets for each plant. Greenhouse Manager Pam Hill was so helpful; my students were thankful for her assistance and enthusiasm. The fact sheets and hands-on activities will be uploaded to a Web page for the greenhouse and can also be used for class visits.

Experiential learning like this connects the knowledge students learn in the classroom to real-world situations. My students developed a true sense of community and their understanding of ethnobotany became deeper, more meaningful and engaging through experiential learning. And we had so much fun! ■

Giving Day by the Numbers

DOUBLING DOWN ON RIC GIVING DAY

On April 26 Rhode Island College celebrated its most successful Giving Day yet – the annual day of philanthropy – organized by the Rhode Island College Foundation. The theme for this year's fundraiser was One Bold Day of Giving. The goal was to engage 500 individual donors, a bold target that would more than double the number of donors from the previous year. Thanks to the generosity of the Rhode Island College community, that goal was exceeded. We had 587 donors contribute on Giving Day. Our dollar total this year was $150,499.

Giving Day on the Quad this year was bigger than ever. Students participated in games, a chalk art contest, karaoke and a bouncy house and indulged in sundaes and Del's lemonade. The excitement was palpable and the whole campus was engaged. Everyone felt the energy of Giving Day.

To ignite the spirit of competition, we held a contest among the five schools at the college: the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, the Feinstein School of Education and Human Development, the School of Business, the Zvart Onanian School of Nursing and the School of Social Work. The school that solicited the most donors for its respective Dean's Fund would be the winner of the prestigious Deans' Cup.

Each dean made a compelling video about why donors should give to their school. All of the schools put forth a tremendous effort, but the School of Nursing was the victor with a whopping 111 donations. The trophy was presented to

■ ALUMNI ■ FRIENDS ■ STUDENTS ■ FACULTY ■ STAFF

Interim Dean of Nursing Justin DiLibero. Rumor has it that the other schools are already plotting how to trounce the School of Nursing in next year's competition and earn bragging rights.

Another factor that led to this year's success was the $10,000 challenge to the RIC community by RIC President Jack Warner and his wife Celeste Warner '90. Warner said that if 100 alumni gave on Giving Day, he and Mrs. Warner would donate $10,000. Our loyal alumni came through and we received Warner's very generous gift. Thank you to President Warner and our valued alumni.

The RIC Foundation board of directors, led by its president, Joyce Stevos '65, placed another challenge resulting in a $21,777 donation by the board on Giving Day.

We couldn't have had as much success as we did without our generous sponsors: University Orthopedics, BankRI, Partridge, Snow & Hahn LLP, Fiducient Advisors and Dimeo Construction Company.

The driving force behind this year's Giving Day was, of course, our students. RIC students are resilient, they have grit, they're determined and they work hard to achieve a better life for themselves and their families. More than 60 percent depend on financial assistance to finish their degree. Thanks to Giving Day donations, RIC students can build professional momentum rather than worry about debt after college. These donations ensure that they have access to state-of-the-art facilities and that our faculty are supported in their research and professional development, which they bring back to the classroom.

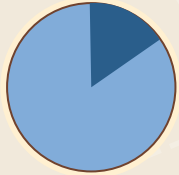

Thank you to all who participated in Giving Day 2023. Please be on the lookout for our Save the Date for Giving Day 2024. ■

RIC FOUNDATION ENDOWMENT

Letter from the Director of Administration and Finance

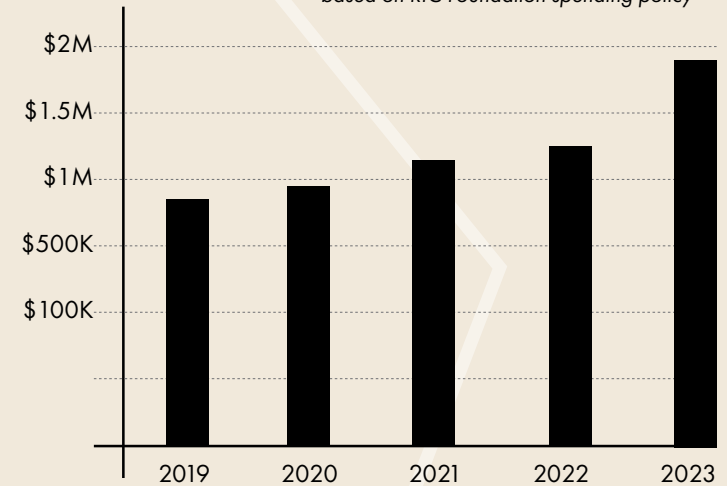

On behalf of the Rhode Island College Foundation Investment Committee, I am pleased to report the endowment portfolio experienced 12.1 percent growth in the fiscal year ending June 30, 2023. The committee's commitment to a long-term growth strategy ensures that the annual needs are being met while also building capital for future investments in the college.

The investment performance, though an important factor, is not the only element to the growth experienced in the overall portfolio. Enhanced support from alumni, faculty and staff, friends, corporations and foundations also contributed significantly to that growth. We would like to take this opportunity to thank all of you for your generosity and dedication to Rhode Island College.

WIDENING THE PHILANTHROPIC LENS: THE MANY WAYS TO GIVE

Philanthropy is critical to the success of our institution and community. Giving provides students with scholarships so they can build academic momentum rather than worry about debt after college and ensures that students have access to state-of-the-art facilities. Giving also supports research and professional development, the fruits of which our faculty bring back to their classrooms.

ANNUAL SUPPORT

The majority of Rhode Island College donors give unrestricted support, which means their gifts allow the college to fluidly maximize use of the funds, enabling timely investments in response to the greatest needs and opportunities on campus.

Because these gifts are not targeted for a particular initiative, these donations can be leveraged across the RIC community when and where support is most needed.

SCHOLARSHIPS & ENDOWMENTS

These gifts honor individuals and reflect alumni gratitude. They are often endowed for the purposes of providing scholarships to students. Some gifts are demonstrations of admiration for former professors while others reflect a desire to assist the college in continuing to fulfill its mission.

Income from endowments can be either directed or unrestricted, based on donor requests.

PLANNED GIVING

Planned giving is a way to leave a legacy. It can be as simple as adding Rhode Island College as a beneficiary on an existing account or including RIC in your will. Certain planned gifts can also give you immediate tax benefits and guaranteed income for life.

These gifts are typically made in support of specific purposes, especially in the area of student and faculty support, as well as to establish endowed funds.

SAVE THE DATE FOR RIC'S ANNUAL GIVING DAY: 4-24-24!

On Wednesday April 24, 2024, Rhode Island College will be holding its 24-hour fundraiser, One Bold Day of Giving!

Last year, thanks to our loyal Rhode Island College community, we surpassed our 500-donor goal by having close to 600 donors support our most successful Giving Day ever, raising over $150,000.

This year, we hope alumni, faculty, staff and friends will once again come together to raise funds for our determined Rhode Island College Students. Join us on 4-24-24!
